

Northern Beaches News

A message from the Mayor

Next Thursday will see the final in a series of budget roadshows - an opportunity for people to learn about the exciting things we are doing over the next 12 months and beyond to make the Northern Beaches even better.

Since amalgamation we have already achieved so much, consolidating much of our functions to find real savings for residents which we are using to reduce debt and invest in community projects and infrastructure.

As smaller Councils, we didn't always have the scale or capacity to keep up with asset maintenance or afford to deliver the big projects the community was crying out for. That's why it's incredibly exciting to look to the next one, three and five years and see what can now be delivered. Learn more and come along to Thursday's roadshow or provide your feedback by 27 May (see details this page).

Next week is National Volunteer Week, an annual celebration to say a huge thanks to the six million volunteers who give their time to help others every day across the country, contributing an estimated $200 billion to the Australian economy annually.

On the Northern Beaches I know we have a huge active volunteer army who coach sporting teams, staff school canteens, patrol our beaches, support our seniors, run community events, fundraise for important causes, run art and theatre projects and clean up our bushland and waterways...to name just a few areas.

Indeed, it is hard to imagine the difference to our society without volunteers so, thank you all, young and old!

This Wednesday I was fortunate to attend a great event at Glen Street Theatre where Council invited our creative community to come together to share ideas and give us feedback on some of our arts and culture projects and initiatives.

There was a great buzz and excitement in the room as like-minded people connected with us and each other and I can't wait to see some of the inspiring ideas come to life over the coming months and years.

And finally, a reminder that Council meets next Tuesday night.

Have a great weekend.
