

A message from the Deputy Mayor

The Northern Beaches is rich in Aboriginal history and home to many inspiring Aboriginal women who celebrate and share their culture every day.

This week, to mark NAIDOC Week and as part of the 2018 Gai-mariagal

Festival, over 150 woven art pieces were installed on the Stuart Somerville Bridge at Queenscliff.

The art display is the result of a community project where people shared stories and creativity during weaving workshops under the guidance of Northern Beaches Aboriginal artists.

It's an impressive sight as you walk over the bridge - I encourage you to have a look.

As we head into the final week of the school holidays, there are still spaces available in some of our vacation care centres, libraries and arts and environment programs. If the kids are at a loose end, you'll find lots to keep them busy - check out the website for details.

Finally, in a sign of how far we have come since amalgamation, our Mayor was named the most influential person on the Northern Beaches by the Manly Daily this week.

There is little doubt our new size and capacity gives us greater ability to advocate for our residents and get real results - with runs on the board already in areas such as planning and transport. As we continue to streamline the work of the new Council we can only go from strength to strength.

Enjoy the weekend.
